Users can view the lessons as a slideshow or with a more traditional video viewing option. Lightroom is Adobe's newer image manipulation program. It's more of a tool than Photoshop in the editing sense, but it offers features that are comparable to Photoshop in the manipulation sense. It also is more intuitive than Photoshop in the layout sense, which can make it easier for beginners to use. Lightroom uses the RAW image format, not TIFF, and is able to edit JPEG and TIFF files. Adobe Illustrator is a vector image-editing program. Vector images are computerized versions of drawings, such as the letters used in this book. As such, a vector image can be modified, scaled, and manipulated without causing any loss of quality. Chapter 3 is a brief tour of the interfaces of the two programs — Photoshop and Lightroom — with pointers to their various editing features. The following software options are worth considering for printing your photos. Adobe Photoshop You can edit individual photos using Photoshop without the need for a graphics program. This is ideal if you print a limited number of very large prints. Most of the photo manipulation features are accessed through the Adobe Photoshop interface. Alternatively, you can use a graphics program as an intermediate step between a digital camera and your printer. Picasa, which comes with your Google account, includes editing tools that make it easy to correct color and lighten or darken an image. Adobe Acrobat XI If you're using Adobe

Acrobat XI, you're in luck: You can save a local or embedded PDF as an EPS file and then use that file as the basis for printing out an enlarged image from your monitor. The instructions for this process are in Chapter 5. This option is also ideal for printing small numbers of large prints that you can generate at home. Now that you have Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Acrobat, you can make any of the print-related changes suggested in Chapter 5, which opens up a world of possibilities — assuming you print only black-and-white. Other online printing programs Online printing services such as Shutterfly, Snapfish, and Snapfish Photo Online offer print options. These

Sitting around idle for long periods of time can be hard on your device - both your wallet and your laptop are tired of spending money on replacement. Luckily, there are plenty of ways to take charge of those idle moments to keep both the computer and your bank account healthy. Here are the best ways to get a productive use out of those idle minutes. 1. Take a bit of downtime to compile that spreadsheet Let's face it, we spend way too much time filling out spreadsheet with our phone either in bed, or at a cafe. So, why not take a little time to compile this information for your accountant? If you need to save money on your phone bill, see if you can bundle your calls together and have a single call instead of roaming around the place. Use apps like Spring to make bundling your calls a breeze. 1. Start your day with three cups of coffee This may not be obvious, but start the morning off right by having a coffee first thing. Coffee increases alertness and helps you stay productive. The National Coffee Association reports that the average person uses $155 worth of coffee in an average month. That's $6,320 a year. So for just one coffee, it'll be a huge time and money saver. It makes me think about how I started my day off, the thought that once I hit my minimum payment on my phone bill I know I'm going to be mooching off my wife and trying to do all those expensive things, how nice it would have been if I had coffee at the start of my day to put me in a healthier mood and start to feel like I could pull myself out of all those expensive habits of mine. But now it's too late. 2. Fill in that form on the train Put that list of contacts to form on the train, put that email or two to send out on the train. Just write it out and get it done. I've done this for years, on trains to Sydney or Melbourne, on the bus or when I'm doing my work on-line. Because it's so easy it's honestly all a huge productivity improvement. I usually go for a 20 minute train journey. Not because it's going to kill me, but because I literally write out 2 or three emails, get as much work done as I can and then read something
